INVESTMENT STRATEGY

Ichigo is a Japanese engagement investor. Ichigo invests in companies that are trading substantially below their intrinsic value and supports management-led positive change to catalyze the company's public market value to that intrinsic value. We respect our portfolio companies and as committed shareholders work for the success of the companies, all stakeholders, and all shareholders.

Portfolio Update

Ichigo was up 0.4% in April versus up 6.6% for TOPIX and up 5.9% for MSCI Japan Small Cap. The primary portfolio return drivers were: Ebara (6361), up 25% for a +2.3% contribution; Haseko (1808), down 6% for a -1.1% contribution; and Open House (3288), down 8% for a -1.7% contribution.

Ichigo underperformed in a strong month for Japanese and global equities, which rallied powerfully on AI-fueled risk-on buying activity.

There continues to be a major push-pull between the potential long-term earnings contribution of AI productivity gains, along with the immediate earnings contribution from massive AI investment driving hardware and infrastructure demand, and the negative macroeconomic and supply chain effects of high energy prices, the crippling of transport through the Strait of Hormuz, and geopolitical uncertainty.

This push-pull is also being played out in Ichigo's portfolio, with semiconductor equipment manufacturer Ebara soaring 25% in April, and homebuilders Open House and Haseko dropping 8% and 6%, respectively. The Japanese homebuilder sell-off was primarily driven by concerns that the Strait of Hormuz closure could lead to shortages of petroleum-based parts and materials, and thus increase input prices and delay home completions. Japan relies heavily upon the Middle East for certain petroleum derivatives, so these concerns are real.

Having said that, petroleum-based input costs are tiny in the context of total homebuilding costs (which are overwhelmingly land and labor), there are alternative sources of supply that are being brought online as Japan and the world scrambles to address potential shortages, and as the leading companies in their sectors – single-family homes for Open House, condominiums for Haseko – Open House and Haseko have both economies of scale and pricing power which substantially insulate them from any downside. We thus view the earnings impact as negligible, and look forward to the two companies demonstrating this with continued strong earnings growth.

Thank you for investing with Ichigo. Take care, be safe.
